PERSONALITIES

R. von F. DOMKOWICZ, who is seriously ill at the Queen's hospital, is reported to be slightly improved today.
BARON CHAS. ETTA LE GAY, who signs himself as a commissioner of the Reform Trading Organization of China, will not sail for the Orient on the Korea. He has announced that he will remain here indefinitely. Baron Le Gay was injured by a Rapid Transit car recently, and this is one of the reasons given for his decision to remain here longer.
PALMER WOODS left on the Kilauea today for his home in Kohala. Before leaving he said that there was nothing to give out so far as he was concerned regarding a possible appointment to office under the new administration. In political circles the rumor is strong that the ex-senator will be recommended either for a territorial or a federal position.

BACHELORHOOD AS DISTASTEFUL AS SPINSTERHOOD—FACT IS PROVED IN MANY LETTERS TO STAR-BULLETIN

Bachelorhood is as distasteful as spinsterhood. The demand for wives is as great as the demand for husbands. There are as many men willing to undertake a correspondence calculated to lead to matrimony as there are women. So it is shown by the communications sent to the Star-Bulletin asking the addresses of the women who have communicated with this paper in quest of husbands.
A few days ago the Star-Bulletin published an article concerning the numerous letters it had received from women in different parts of the country asking to be allowed to advertise for men "with matrimonial intentions." Since that day letters to no small number have reached here from men anxious to accept the invitation, and declaring themselves to be strictly in the designated class—that is, out for a better-half.
Their letters are almost as interesting as those from the women. They are as varied in content, and they are more bold. They do not mince matters in the least, and they seem to a man to look on it as a plain, common-sense business proposition. They quite candidly say how much money they make, deal unblushingly with a few bad habits possessed and esteemed, and end with a sort of summary of their finances, possibilities, requirements and hopes. They put in their case-in-chief, as it were, and if the feminine matrimonial aspirants are willing to take them as they are, with their bad habits as well as their good, they are willing to carry the venture or adventure further.
There is a pungent scent of pipe tobacco on their stationery as a rule. Their confessions of loneliness—and there is quite often such a confession—is sometimes terribly blunt. They tell their briefer possibilities candidly if it before indicting the letters.
Just as one woman offered her loneliness as a plea in mitigation of a possible offense or indelicacy of advertising for a husband, so do the men refer to their loneliness as a justification of their wish to win a wife by correspondence. The difference is in expression. The woman blushed as she wrote, no doubt, touched her loneliness with a shy chic, and probably longed for the destruction of the letter immediately she had posted it.
It is quite different with the men. It is shown in their expressions. But they had a pipe to counsel them and more inherent boldness. So they must have wished their letters God-speed and must now be waiting anxiously for an answer from the one they are to undertake to win with pen and ink and postage stamps.
In Europe, one correspondent points out, there is nothing unusual in a woman advertising for a husband. Business has made that concession to romance. But in this country, he adds, it is extremely rare and unencouraged, and a chap is thrown on his own resources and good fortune to meet and court the "not impossible she." From his argument it would seem that society should not allow matrimony, being such a serious matter, to go on hap-hazard, indifferent to whether suitable people meet and marry. Some agency should exist to fix up marriages. One way of striking at the race suicide menace! The letters from the men have come from the tinker to the soldier, with by far the largest number from the soldier. Some of the writers say they are in the service of the army for a long time to come, and therefore are in great need of a wife; others say their time of service is about over, and that they therefore wish for a wife—"a little woman to make happy," one phrased it.
Each has his own reasons for wishing a wife, whether in the army or in the tinker's shop. And each probably will soon be corresponding with at least one woman who is seeking a husband, the address having been furnished by the Star-Bulletin.

COMMENT AND SUGGESTIONS IN THE WORLD OF FINANCE

By HENRY CLEWS.

Henry Clews of the banking firm of that name, New York, looks upon the attitude of this country to England in the Panama canal controversy with regret. In addition to realizing the great value of British trade with the United States, he seems to feel that much harm can be done and no good from the position our country has taken with regard to the canal. He writes in his last bulletin:
"There is no small reason for regret at the shadow cast over our friendly relations with Great Britain through our attitude on the Panama Canal question. We are about to celebrate 100 years of peace with Great Britain, and this point of irritation should be adjusted in some way before that event begins. Not everybody is aware that Great Britain is by far our best customer. She and her colonies take vastly more of our products than any other nation. Nearly one-half of our exports go thence and over one-quarter of our imports come from the British empire. The commercial relations between the two nations are enormously valuable to each. To a large degree the two countries are interdependent, and whatever seriously hurts the one must inevitably affect the other. There are hundreds of millions of British capital in the United States, which we could not drive away without injury to ourselves. No two nations have more in common than the United States and Great Britain as to traditions, language, government, commerce, industry, etc.
"True, we are rivals. But the rivalry should be of the best sort; and our contests should be as between builders and not as between destroyers. Both countries have been conspicuous leaders in the efforts towards abolishing war; and yet, in spite of all of these efforts, and in spite of the mass of public opinion, a small noisy minority persists in creating friction and misunderstanding between the two most powerful nations on the globe. Such a state of affairs seems utter foolishness in the eyes of the other nations; and for this country to conspicuously support high ideals in international conduct and then not to strictly live up to the Panama treaty obligations, the terms of which at least it would appear call for arbitration or some other mode of adjustment, is downright dishonesty. It is moreover, unquestionably disapproved by the great mass of public opinion in America. Our government cannot afford to descend to practices which its subjects could not conscientiously endorse. If the country really desires to denounce the treaty with Great Britain—and that is highly doubtful—let us do so in a legitimate fashion, and stand prepared to give Great Britain some equivalent for surrendering advantages to us which we cannot give back. On the surface there is something in the contention that having built the canal we should have the right to favor American vessels by free tolls. But we bartered this right away in consideration of Great Britain surrendering certain rights and privileges; so, if we are to favor American vessels, some other form of compensation must be adopted.
"At present there are only a few lines of American ships likely to use the canal, and these all happen to be in prosperous condition. Should circumstances warrant the extension of some favor to American ships, possibly no better expedient can be found than that of compensation in the form of a postal subsidy in consideration that such vessels should conform to our government's requirements such as great speed as mail carriers and also to be subject to be taken for use at appraised value in case of war. Whatever may be done to satisfy the just claims of American shipowners, our treaties with foreign nations should be regarded as solemn obligations. We expect other countries to stand by their agreements, and we must do likewise; otherwise international comity will be impossible, and we will drive England and Germany into some sort of "entente cordiale" against the United States, especially with visions before them of our Monroe Doctrine, which Europe generally dislikes. The drift in that direction is already unpleasantly suggestive.

NEW CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION IS NOT NAMED—FERN EXPLAINS
Another meeting of the supervisors passed today without the names of the new civil service commissioners being handed in by Mayor Fern. He, however, explained that the reason the appointments were not submitted today was that the meeting, being a special one, was for the passage of bills and resolutions only.
By next Tuesday evening, which is the date set for the next meeting of the supervisors, he has given it out that the names of the commissioners will be forthcoming. What men he has decided upon or considering is a secret belonging to His Honor alone, and he is keeping a vigilant and unbroken guard over it. As near as he has come to giving the names of the men he is after for the jobs is to say that he wants businessmen, and that he is searching around for suitable businessmen to serve.
